Meet Ben Schatzel:

Ben Schatzel was born in Hawaii, to a military family and grew up as a Military brat. He has resided in Chicago IL for the past six years. He is a distinguished human behaviorist and disability labor reformist. He has a B.A. in Applied Behavioral Sciences from the University of Kansas. He is the Founder and CEO of Stannum Core Solutions, a workforce consultancy dedicated to creating sustainable pathways for neurodivergent adults. His proprietary Spectrum Certified® process has been implemented by organizations across Illinois and Missouri. Ben's pioneering work has earned national recognition in outlets like USA Today, Fox 32 Chicago, and Authority Magazine, and his influence was cemented by his inclusion as a 2025 listee, in Marquee's Who's Who in America.

As a behavioral therapist, Ben directly witnessed a drop in support services for disabled individuals transitioning from school to adulthood. He realized that capable neurodivergent adults were systematically failed by a lack of sustainable professional pathways. Ben decided to make it his life's mission to shifting the focus from childhood development to labor reform. He also identified a critical deficit for employers; during the post-Covid Great Resignation, companies desperately needed skilled, reliable talent. Recognizing neurodivergent individuals as highly valuable, untapped labor source, he helps forward-thinking employers strategically engage this workforce.

Ben Schatzel now travels the country and the world to in person and online events helping men and women both entrepreneurs and leaders of companies providing them with actionable insights into behavioral management and universal talent strategy. His approach is predicated on a powerful idea: that everyone, regardless of ability, can achieve extraordinary career success through holistic environmental advancement.

Despite his extensive education and experience, Ben Schatzel remains humble, authentic and a very engaging speaker.
